Used this on a recent road trip throughout Italy and it helped me a lot. We also used GPS, but I like getting my bearings with a map. For example, I would not have known we were looking at Mt. Vesuvius, but the map clearly showed it. I like that it's in Italian, because all the signs of course are. And if you're in Italy of course you want to try to speak Italian!

Printed maps still have their place in our digital world. I have this nice big map on my wall and am plotting out our trip to Italy later this year. It great!

I'm giving this map 3 stars, though perhaps that's a bit unfair. I needed a map to get me from the Rome airport (FCO) up to Umbria, and this did the trick. What the map cannot accomplish, however, is a simplification of the Italian roads and naming conventions. In that respect, I suppose you could say that this map was perfect in that it mirrored reality. Roads change number almost at random it seems, and a map (at least for me) was most useful to ensure I was headed in the correct direction (that is, East, West, etc., as opposed to "Umbria"). For that, you simply have to watch the road signs. In all, this map did what we needed it to do - help chart long distances - but for anything more than that, you'll need one of Michelin's excellent regional maps (which were great).

Renowned for over 100 years for their clear, accurate and easy-to-read mapping, Michelin country maps give travelers an overall picture of their route, with practical road and travel information; and city maps containing extensive street indexes orient them quickly so they can find their way to their destination.
