By Bonnie L. Price
This was a great help, as we weren't sure we were going to have GPS support while staying in Lot and visiting much of the Dordogne region. As it turned out, we bought a map chip for the Garmin Nuvi we had ($35 or so) and it worked really great. What the map did was give me a visual orientation of where our destinations were, and it did a great job. The only caveat is that French roads are not well marked, so sometimes the maps- and the GPS guidance - is a little hard to figure out. It is a LOVELY region and we are so glad we went, and this map helped with its great detail.

By Diana Ruddick
One of the things I love about travel is researching and planning. These gigantic regional maps are so helpful when it comes to finding the small villages and backroads. While they're way too big to use in the car, the detail they provide helps immensely in figuring out routes ahead of time. Even though I often rely on a GPS, a traditional map gives me a mental picture of where I'm going that the electronic helper can't provide.

By Yanik
It may be the best map of the region, but I ended up barely cracking it open while in Dordogne. If you have a GPS in your car or take one along, it takes care of all the navigation needs. In that case, the Map is useful for reference purposes, yes, but there are plenty of free ones offered in the region that fulfill this role nicely.

Michelin local maps provide detailed coverage of France, perfect for fully exploring the country
