the towns and roads. I had 3 maps of the area and we eventually ended up with the other two on the floor, and then later on, in the back seat. I didn't want to buy this one because I thought it would be a mess of folded papers and ripped edge like the maps of old - not so! It folded easily and neatly every time and I could bend it over on itself to focus just on the area we were traveling in. It is a huge map if it is all opened up. GPS and googlemaps worked great for us while we were there but you need a map to figure out where you are and this is really the one. Don't be afraid to trust the map and enjoy the back roads, it is the best part of Tuscany!³ of 3 people found the following review helpful. Good Tuscany map for self-guided touring. By ron from philly I think the Michelin maps have overall the best detail for driving in Europe. They list lots of routes by number, and they include many small villages and towns that help in navigating back roads. If I could change one thing about this map it would be to use black lettering for all city/town names, to make them easier to read on the road especially in poor lighting conditions. Michelin apparently doesn't sell larger scale maps for Tuscany, but if this becomes a problem many of the local tourist information offices have good road maps of nearby regions. An advantage of the Michelin maps is that they are coordinated with the Michelin Red Guides and Green Guides, for those of us who still like to have books rather than rely on the Internet and smart phones for all travel planning.¹⁶ of 17 people found the following review helpful. best map of Tuscany By Richard Hayward If you are driving in Tuscany, this is the map that you need. It contains all the details you could ever want. As it says on the cover, its based on satellite imagery, and contains a lot of physical detail such as the location of areas containing buildings which would be absent without this feature. A really great map, and I'm packing it on my next trip to Tuscany. After my visit to Tuscany, I can say this map really does the job. What I can suggest is that you also purchase some of the 1:25,000 maps which are available in the Tuscan bookshops which shows exact walking and driving information that you will need if you are driving or walking this country. Love this map.

Detailed Regional Map of the Tuscany region. Use with Michelin Green Guide for sightseeing and touring options.
