Prague is probably one of the most underrated vacation destinations in Europe. It is part of the Czech Republic, but has been ruled by Roman emperors and various kings and queens and has one of the oldest continuously active castles on the European continent (which is now home to the president). Prague is known for its magnificent architecture. Especially that of the old world variety however, perhaps Prague is best known for its laid-back bohemian outlook product has become world-famous for attracting artists, writers and entertainers from all over the world from as far back as anyone can remember. Famous composers as well as artists like Gauguin in Rembrandt have spent time in the magnificent city of Prague. Some people claim the city of Prague that inspired them to make such beautiful works of art and to this day into this day the city still continues to inspire artists of all types, from painters to ballerinas. Aside from the excellent architecture, rich culture and heritage Prague is also known for its pub scene with its hearty food and beers Prague was and is the leader of the craft beer movement in Europe. And as always, the people across have a relaxed attitude about drinking, the standard drinking age (as with most of Europe) is 18. However, you should be warned that the penalties for public drunkenness or vandalism are much harsher than they are in the states. You are not simply given a citation for a first minor offense and told to go home and sleep it off. You are more likely to be put into a drunk tank (holding cell) until the officers are sure you're sober enough to function properly so word to the wise. If you can't hold your alcohol, it is suggested that you are the designated driver or sober spokesman for your group. After washing down sites on local cuisine, with some very good locally brewed beers. You might want to take a stroll to work off those excess calories. And there are plenty of boulevards in Prague on which to do this. So if a bohemian paradise sounds like a good idea for your next adventure. Then book your tickets and grab your bag and be sure to take Ms. Passport along for the ride, her three day unforgettable mini vacation itinerary is a must-have for any traveler.
