Paul Richard Scott : Montenegro or Bust before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Montenegro or Bust:

Balkans with two former chums, partly inspired by and mimicking a similar journey made by Griff Rhys-Jones, Rory McGrath and Dara O Briain as part of the BBC series 'Three Men Go To...'. It details the journey to Croatia and Montenegro and the trials and tribulations encountered along the way as well as providing information about bars and restaurants to be found there. What they ate, what they drank and where they drank it (probably to excess) whilst surreptitiously watching an endless parade of catwalk queens and scoring them on 'The Dunmow Fritch' Scale. Lots of funny interludes, though I have found out after reading this on Kindle that by downloading the free version on lulu.com, I have had the bonus of looking at full colour photographs of the scenery as well. A couple of interludes are omitted from the Kindle version, 'Spock The Difference' being the most obvious, though it hardly diminishes the Kindle experience. Some minor historical facts are included, but a lot are glossed over to concentrate on the more humorous aspects of the tour. A very funny story that is told in the usual relaxed manner, and one that has prompted me to persuade my wife that this year we are going to retrace the steps of this adventure for ourselves (aside from ogling the ladies). With flights as cheap as they are, I'm looking forward to spending time in Kotor, Budva and Herceg Novi, as well as Dubrovnik, so a very worthwhile read. Get a copy. Get a ticket. Live the laugh and love the journey. Great stuff. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Boys in the Balkans By Kenneth P. Mr. Scott's memoir of his week in Montenegro is not really a travel book. It's more of a buddy book. It's about three fifty-something British educators who flat-out enjoy each others company. They fly into Dubrovnik, Croatia. They bus into Kotor, Montenegro. They drink beer and ogle women like sex-crazed adolescents. Mr. Scott is at once angry and tolerant of tourists in his midst. He puts up with them even as they piss him off, even as he leans left or right to eavesdrop on their unacceptable conversations. The beer flows and the laughs reverberate. What makes the book work is the voice of the author, always casual, unassuming and authentic, peppered forever with the Brit jargon that makes Yanks like me laugh out loud. I didn't learn as much about the area as I might have, but I know that I must, at all costs, climb the 1300 plus steps above the city of Kotor. "If you do nothing else in this life, then you have to go to Kotor, climb the wall and just gaze at the silly gob-smacked wonder at the view from the top." Thank you Paul Scott. I will do just that. Planning a trip to Montenegro? Read the book. No plans? Staying home? Read the book. It's funny.

Here's the recipe: Take 3 College Lecturers, place in a blue Nissan Micra for three hours, allowing them to simmer in their own juices, before putting the contents into a pressurised and air-conditioned vessel for a further two and a half hours at an altitude of approximately 35,000 feet. Empty onto the Adriatic coastline near to Dubrovnik and then bake at 35 degrees, basting liberally with factor 30 Sun screen for a week. Liberally sprinkle with a bevy of Balkan beauties, restaurants and a couple of breweries, before allowing to ferment and cool in the shade of numerous public houses. They also avoided the Irish Bars like the plague. . . Add information gleaned or omitted from "The Lonely Planet Guide" and the local Autobuska Stanica, then simply serve, stand back and watch the fun. A travelogue with a Big difference, and if it doesn't tempt the reader to pack a rucksack and a map, grab a flight and get over there, then there is something seriously wrong with them. What a wonderful world. . .
